WILD ATLANTIC WAY

SLÍ FHIÁIN AN ATLANTAIGH

INTRODUCTION

Have you ever dreamed of embarking on a journey of discovery, to hidden places and secret worlds where all kinds of enchantments lie waiting for you? Well now you can, along the wildest, most captivating, coastal driving route in the world – Ireland’s Wild Atlantic Way! Tucked away in little villages and towns that snuggle into the coastline are delightful cafes and restaurants, where you can indulge in your passion for good food and great wine. Maybe you will hear a few words of Irish spoken along the way in Ireland’s Gaeltacht (Irish speaking regions) or reignite your passion for life while surfing on magnificent waves off the coast of Donegal and Sligo. Or you might take time to reflect on times past with a visit to the ruins of a sixth century monastic settlement on the stunning Skellig Michael in Kerry. You may roam through the romantic beauty of scenic Ards Forest Park in Donegal. Or you might watch the weather change from the historic Clare Island Lighthouse in Mayo. Wherever you go along the Wild Atlantic Way, you will encounter moments of magic, moments to treasure and experiences that you will want to return to again and again.

If you’re looking for something that little bit special, take in one of our ‘Signature Experiences’ at some of the breath-taking Discovery Points along the Way. Here, at these points of outstanding scenic beauty, are experiences that every visitor will savour – from celebrating the summer solstice at Féile Grianán Áiligh in Donegal to trekking across the sands on a Connemara Pony in Galway to experiencing the lush vegetation and sub-tropical shrubs of Garinish Island in Cork. This Manual provides some examples of the many treasures hidden along the Wild Atlantic Way that lie off the beaten track and are therefore generally more suited to independent travellers. This breath – taking coastal route will intrigue and remain in your heart and mind long after you have returned home to the everyday world.

WHEREVER YOU GO ALONG THE WILD ATLANTIC WAY, YOU WILL ENCOUNTER MOMENTS OF MAGIC, MOMENTS TO TREASURE AND EXPERIENCES THAT YOU WILL WANT TO RETURN TO AGAIN AND AGAIN.

WILD ATLANTIC WAY SIGNATURE EXPERIENCES

Signature Discovery Point 1 – Malin Head

CIRCLE IRELAND'S FAR NORTH AT MALIN HEAD

There's drama out at Malin Head – Cionn Mhálanna. The tip of the Inishowen Peninsula is mainland Ireland's farthest northerly point. The wild Atlantic has carved deep crevices into the rugged headland, like Hell's Hole – a dramatic long, deep and narrow chasm where the swells roar and churn. Birds flock here, blown in on the Atlantic winds: regular visitors from Iceland, Greenland and North America; and rarer exotic creatures from further afield. Mythical Queen Banba has given her name to the peninsula's tip – Banba's Crown. It's here that guides from Cycle Inishowen will meet you with an Irish-made bike, for a 45-minute ride to stretch your legs in the fresh sea air, and learn about the area's wildlife, geology and history.

Or visit...

AN GRIANAN AILIGH WONDER TO BEHOLD

An Grianán Ailigh, is a stone ringfort mapped by Ptolomey in his second-century AD map of the world. The ancient site – said to date back nearly 4,000 years – was the base of northern Irish chieftains and known as the Palace of the Northern Princes. It stands 245 metres (800 ft) with spectacular views across heather-covered hills to the vast estuaries that define Ireland's most northerly peninsula – the ruggedly beautiful Inishowen – and across to the walled city of Derry. The fort is used once a year for the The Féile Grianán Áiligh Chieftains Feast which is an ancient-style banquet within the walls of An Grianán Áiligh - well worth a visit. Or you may prefer to visit at a quieter time, to walk inside the tranquil and deserted hillfort's walls, with only the wind for company.

Signature Discovery Point 2 – Fanad Head

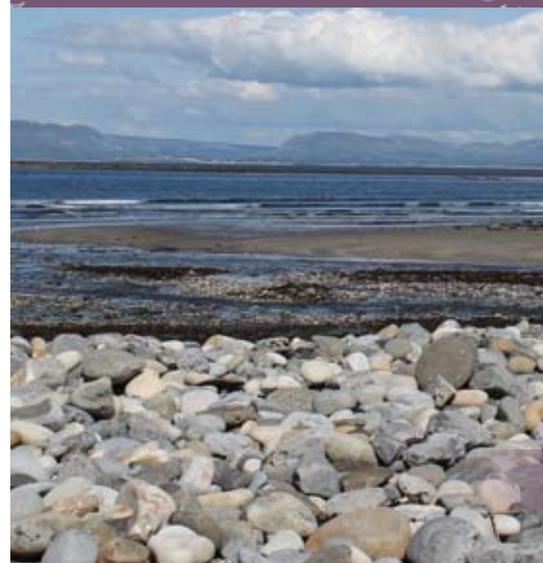

TAKE IN ONE OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL BEACHES IN THE WORLD

A route you will remember on the Wild Atlantic Way is the Knockalla Coast Road with its panoramic views across the estuary looking towards the Inishowen Peninsula and the Atlantic Ocean. As the road ascends you are greeted at the top by one of the most splendid views in Ireland. Looking down on Portsalon and Ballymastocker Bay it is no surprise that this beach was voted 2nd most beautiful beach in the world a few years ago. A haven for water sport enthusiasts, golfers and walkers alike, it offers it all. From Portsalon continue along the coastal road up as far as Fanad Head and Fanad lighthouse. The Lighthouse is the secondly most Northerly lighthouse in the Republic of Ireland and locals say that Fanad Head lighthouse is slightly higher than the Eiffel Tower. However, I think it depends on the wind!! Head for Rathmullan and fresh Fish and Chips in 'Salt and Batter' Takeaway while you sit in the pier and the Ferry for Inishowen. The Ferry crossing will take you 20 minutes, cuts down the road journey and gives the driver the chance to sit back, relax and soak in the views.

And for some relaxation ...

TORY ISLAND IS KNOWN FOR ITS STRONG FOLKLORE AND MUSICAL
TRADITIONS, AND FOR ITS OWN
SCHOOL OF NATIVE ART –
ESTABLISHED IN THE 1950s.

MALIN HEAD, DONEGAL

AUGHRIS HEAD, SLIGO

MEET AN ARTIST KING

On the Donegal Gaeltacht outpost of Tory Island – a remote & rugged crag 12km (7.5 miles) offshore in the wild Atlantic – traditional Irish culture is the way of life and these independent people have elected their own King since the 6th century. Today's King of Tory is painter Patsaí Dan Mac Ruaidhrí, whose royal duties include meeting the ferries on the quayside to welcome visitors to the island. Tory Island is known for its strong folklore and musical traditions, and for its own school of native art – established in the 1950s. It's still home to many painters today, and their work is shown at the island's Gallery, where you'll probably meet some of them too. Who knows, you may even be inspired to paint!

Signature Discovery Point 3 – Sliabh Liag

SLIABH LIAG – AMONGST THE HIGHEST SEA CLIFFS IN EUROPE

Sliabh Liag are amongst the highest sea cliffs in Ireland and the huge panoramas presented to you from these cliffs can look different in every segment. Bright azure skies appear next to blue grey shafts of rain which bolt sea and sky together. Still further across this ever changing canvas, beams of light, diffused by wisps of thin cloud, warm the cool grey water into pools of liquid gold.

Donegal Bay majestically swoops towards you, while to the right; there is a lake at eye level as you walk upwards to see the jagged tops of Sliabh Liag cutting the scudding clouds. For the experienced walker One Man's pass will take you to the summit of Sliabh Liag. For the leisure visitor the viewing platform will be all you need. Continue on to Glencolumbkille and visit the Folk Village where they have managed to freeze-frame traditional folk life for posterity. Silver Strand (Trabane) is a spectacular hidden gem of a beach at Malin Beg and 7km south of Glencolumbkille. The beach is accessible only from the sea or on foot via a series of steps, your challenge here is to count the steps down to the beach... be assured you will never get the same number, it's one of life's little mysteries.

And why not ...

WATCH THEM WEAVE MAGIC INTO DONEGAL TWEED

They've been making handwoven tweed in Donegal for centuries. Nature provides the raw materials: wool from the sheep that thrive in the hills and bogs, and dyes from the hedgerows and fields ... blackberries, fuchsia, gorse and moss. Visit Studio Donegal at Kilcar – a business committed to preserving and promoting the original skills passed down from generation to generation – watch the handweavers and spinners at work ... and take a piece of Ireland away with you, inspired by the rugged landscape of Donegal.

Signature Discovery Point 4 – Mullaghmore Head

SEE GIANT SWELLS OFF MULLAGHMORE HEAD

Huge Atlantic rollers crash onto surfing strands all the way up Ireland's wild western seaboard. But it's off the coast of Sligo that they've discovered 'Prowlers' – a wave like no other with swells said to be up to 100ft. That's why Sligo's Mullaghmore Head hosted Ireland's first Big Wave contest in 2011, drawing surfers from across the globe. Tow-in surfing – involving jetskis as well as surfers – is a highly skilled sport and exciting to watch from the headland. But it's best in the winter months, so you'll want to wrap up warm and then hurry back to that seat by a turf fire in a cosy Sligo pub. And when you're ready to give it a go yourself, there are several surf schools in the nearby seaside town of Bundoran, which hosts Ireland's International Surfing Festival in June.

And for some relaxation ...

TAKE A TRADITIONAL SEAWEED BATH

Take a deep, oily soak, floating in a bath of hot Atlantic-seawater and hand-harvested, freshly gathered seaweed, followed by a bracing walk on a beautiful beach at the ocean's edge. This traditional organic cure for stresses and strains is having a resurgence along the Sligo coast as people rediscover natural remedies and are drawn by the simpler lifestyle of Ireland's unspoilt western seaboard. The therapeutic properties of wild seaweed – put down to the high concentrations of iodine in the seaweed fronds – have long been recognised in Ireland. And there's a remarkable variety of seaweed growing in the gloriously unspoilt Atlantic waters off the west coast. At the beginning of the 20th century there were an estimated 300 seaweed bath houses in Ireland and nine in the small town of Strandhill alone. Traditional seaweed baths are available at award-winning Voya Seaweed Baths at Strandhill, and Edwardian Kilcullen's Seaweed Baths at Enniscrone.

Signature Discovery Point 5 – Downpatrick Head

FORAGE FOR WILD FOOD ALONG THE KILLALA SHORELINE

Spend an afternoon with Denis Quinn of Wild Atlantic Cultural Tours – foraging for food out along the shoreline under the huge skies of north Mayo. As the wild Atlantic booms and seabirds swirl and swoop, Denis will guide you expertly across Killala Bay, crossing mudflats, scrambling over rocks, gathering edible seaweeds, rooting around in rockpools and spooning cockles, mussels, clams and winkles from the vast expanse of soft sand uncovered at low tide. Later he'll help you dry your seaweed, and prepare a feast from what you've found. Cockle soup for anyone?

Signature Discovery Point 6 – Keem Strand

WANDER THROUGH A DESERTED VILLAGE ON IRELAND'S LARGEST ISLAND

Cross the road bridge to Ireland's largest island – Achill Island – with its tall seacliffs, bare mountains and sweeping sandy beaches, and follow the Atlantic Drive before turning north towards the Golden Strand. Sheltering under Slievemore Mountain, you can wander through a strange unnamed linear settlement, known simply as the Deserted Village. No-one knows exactly why it was finally abandoned in the early 20th century, but they do know it was one of the last places in Europe to be used as a booley – a place where people lived in summer to graze cattle on the mountainside. You can book a guided tour with expert archaeologists from the Achill Archaeological Field School who work on a dig here every summer. Or simply walk alone from cottage to cottage, imagining life here through the centuries in this remote and poignant spot.

Signature Discovery Point 7 – Killary Harbour

TREK ACROSS SANDS ON A CONNEMARA PONY

The sure-footed Connemara pony – the only horse breed native to Ireland – is the perfect form of transport across the region’s blanket bogs and dazzling beaches. At low tide, Connemara ponies (with their riders) wade or swim across the shallow channel to peaceful islands like Finish, Mweenish and Omey – part of the archipelago off the coast of Connemara. Legend has it that the ponies are descended from Arab stallions that swam ashore when the Spanish Armada sank off the Connemara coast in the 16th century.

Signature Discovery Point 8 – Derrigimalagh

LISTEN TO THE ECHOES OF HISTORY IN A SEA-SWEPT BLANKET BOG

You can hire a bike in Connemara’s ‘capital’ Clifden, and strike out across the starkly strange blanket bog – a mosaic of tiny lakes and peat, crossed by a single narrow road – to uncover two remarkable events of 20th century history. Stick to the Bog Road, and soon you’ll pass the scattered remnants of the world’s first permanent trans-Atlantic radio station - built by Marconi more than a century ago, and burned to the ground during the Irish War of Independence. At its peak it employed several hundred people, transmitting world news across the ocean. Close-by is a white aeroplane-wing-shaped memorial to Alcock and Brown, who crash-landed – uninjured – into Derrigimalagh Bog in 1919 at the end of the first non-stop flight across the Atlantic. In this lonely spot, two resonant examples of the western seaboard’s trans-Atlantic ties. “Next parish, Manhattan”, as they say in these parts.

Signature Discovery Point 9 – Cliffs of Moher

EXPLORE INIS OIRR BY PONY AND TRAP

It’s perfectly possible to explore the smallest and nearest of the Gaeltacht Aran Islands – Inis Oirr – in a day by bicycle ... or even better by pony and trap. Under huge open skies, you’ll trot along the narrowest of lanes, between stone walls, beside wide white-sand beaches, passing clover-covered hills and tiny fields. The islands’ population is growing once again, as exiles return and new arrivals blow in. Aran welcomes visitors year-round, on regular daily ferries that take commuters to the mainland or between the islands. Catch your ferry back to the West Clare music-hub of Doolin for the night: if you time it right you’ll be passing beneath the spectacular Cliffs of Moher just as they’re lit by the rays of the setting sun – arguably the best-ever view of this famous landmark.

And why not ...

COMMUNE WITH NATURE IN THE BURREN

Mary Howard lives in Fanore “with the Atlantic as my ‘front garden’”. She’s one of the local guides who’ll give you a sense of the Burren. In Irish it’s Boireann, or ‘rocky country’ – a vast limestone landscape stretching across northern Clare and southern Galway, then out to sea, where it appears again in the form of the Gaeltacht Aran Islands. Mary calls it “Europe’s largest rock garden”, for it is rich with rare flora, as well as megalithic tombs and monuments older than Egypt’s pyramids. She will meet you at Fanore’s community pub on the shore – O’Donoghue’s – and take you walking along ancient ‘green roads’, crossing the open limestone pavements, climbing the terraced hills and walking the Burren shoreline. Deposited back at O’Donoghue’s, you can sit at a table outside, order a plate of wholesome local food, listen to some Irish songs, and watch the sun sink into the sea.

Signature Discovery Point 10 – Loop Head

CATCH RAINBOWS ON THE LOOP HEAD DRIVE

At the western tip of County Clare, peaceful roads and deserted beaches stretch out along the Loop Head Drive – an off-the-beaten-track alternative to the popular Cliffs of Moher. This narrow peninsula at the mouth of the Shannon offers an elemental experience: huge Atlantic swells smash into miles of sheer granite cliffs, kicking surf high into the air. Then comes the sun – catching the airborne spray and forming countless rainbows. Out at the very end of the peninsula, the white letters E-I-R-E are cut into the grassy clifftop, a relic from WW2, to be seen from the air. You can climb the Loop Head Lighthouse for panoramic views – from Kerry to the Cliffs of Moher; there has been a lighthouse here since 1690. And, if you can’t get enough of this wild and watery windswept world, you can even stay in the 19th century lightkeepers’ accommodation, courtesy of the Irish Landmark Trust.

And while there ...

SEE AND HEAR THE SHANNON DOLPHINS

There are around 160 bottlenose dolphins living in the mouth of the Shannon River, where it joins the wild Atlantic off County Clare’s Loop Head Peninsula. You can follow the road from Kilrush to Aylevarro Point, to see them playing just offshore. Or, for close-up views, you can take a Dolphinwatch boat trip from Carrigaholt, to see dolphins – and hear hydrophone recordings of them too. Geoff, skipper of the custom-built dolphin-watching boat the Craíocht, will introduce you to them: he’s familiar with many of the individual adults, which can be distinguished by their dorsal fin marks. Dolphin calves are born every year and you may also spot grey seals, wild mountain goats and thousands of seabirds on the colossal cliffs. The Mouth of the Shannon is an EU Special Area of Conservation, and Loop Head was designated Ireland’s Aquatic Destination of Excellence, 2010.

Signature Discovery Point 11 – Blasket Sound

TAKE A BOAT TO THE HOME OF IRELAND'S BORN-STORYTELLERS

Out on the very edge of Europe, as far west as you can go in Ireland, lies a deserted village with a poignant past. These are the mystical Blasket Islands – an archipelago off the Dingle Peninsula – famous in Ireland for its storytellers. At the beginning of the 20th century, J M Synge was the first of many writers to visit in search of the undiluted traditional culture that could be found in this isolated, far-flung community, living simply and frugally off the land and sea. Their stories were transcribed, and the islanders themselves were encouraged to record their own lives. These became the first written works to be published from an oral Gaelic culture, revealing a lyrical, poetic style. After many years of hardship and emigration, the last inhabitants left the islands in 1953, when there were no longer enough strong arms left to row their traditional naomhóga (canoes) across the dangerous Blasket Sound. Today you can take a boat to visit the mountainous main island – Great Blasket – to wander among the ruined cottages, then climb An Blascard Mór, spy dolphins and whales, and look west to America, as so many have done before. It's a moving experience, and the natural beauty and poignant echoes of the past will stay with you. Back on the mainland, a visit to the Blasket Centre to meet with its director Mícheál de Mordha – a former presenter and producer for RTE Raidió na Gaeltachta – provides moving insights into the islanders' hard lives, the sorrows of emigration, and the literary heritage of the Blaskets.

THROW A POT INSPIRED BY THE WILD ATLANTIC

At the far end of the Dingle Peninsula, on the scenic Slea Head Drive, is the workshop of one of Ireland's leading potters – the renowned Louis Mulcahy. The low building – with its studio, factory, shop and café – folds into the fields, mountains at its back and the tumultuous waters of the Blasket Sound below. Right opposite, the nearest less than a mile (1.5km) off shore, are the mystical deserted Blasket Islands – a mountainous archipelago with a poignant past, that gave birth to Ireland's greatest born-storytellers. This is the setting that inspires Louis' wonderful work: he talks of the rapid changing colours of the light and the sea – from greys to blues to light greens ... the purple and browns of the heather and shadows on the mountains ... and the roaring red sunsets. Come in the summer months, and you can try your hand at throwing a pot, inspired by the wild Atlantic on the doorstep.

Signature Discovery Point 12 – Skellig Michael

VISIT AN EXTRAORDINARY, FAR-FLUNG PLACE OF PILGRIMAGE

Eight miles off Kerry's magnificent Iveragh Peninsula – where Ireland's highest mountain range sweeps down to the wild Atlantic coast – is one of the wonders of the world: Skellig Michael. 1300 years ago, early Christian monks built a remarkable hermitage at the top of this jagged ocean crag – then at the furthest limits of the known world. Steep steps are carved into the rock. Near the 213 metres (700ft) summit is a collection of 'beehive' monastic cells: solitary places for contemplation and prayer, as far from the distractions of civilisation as it was possible to be. This extraordinary, far-flung place of pilgrimage – described by George Bernard Shaw as "part of our dream world" – is now a UNESCO World Heritage Site. It can be reached by the adventurous – for a sometimes life-changing visit – on a small boat from Portmagee or Ballinskelligs ... but only when the weather allows, and only for those with good sea legs and a head for heights.

And if you're feeling adventurous..

TRY A TASTE OF HEAVEN ON THE SKELLIG COAST

Halfway round the Iveragh Peninsula, narrow byways lead off the main Ring of Kerry towards Ballinskelligs. Signs change to Irish and 9 miles offshore two jagged crags – Oileáin na Scealaga – rise out of the Atlantic: Little Skellig, ghostly white, is home to one of the largest seabird colonies in the world, and Skellig Michael. The coastal route, the Skellig Ring, takes you along narrow lanes on clifftops dotted with sheep, with wild Atlantic waves crashing below. At St Finian's Bay – down at the shoreline where the monks embarked en route for Skellig Michael – a very earthly pleasure awaits: a cup of hot chocolate at Europe's most westerly chocolate factory. While surf crashes onto the tiny beach outside, you are enveloped in the warm smells of chocolate-making, inside ebullient Colm Healy's family-run Skelligs Chocolate factory, at the edge of the world. Heavenly!

DUN MORAN BEACH

Signature Discovery Point 13 – Dursey Island

TAKE THE CABLE CAR FOR ‘EUROPE’S LAST SUNSET’

It’s a dramatic drive along the north edge of the remote Beara Peninsula, with views north and west across the mussel rafts and seal colonies in Kenmare Bay, to Ireland’s highest mountains, and the ghostly outline of the Skelligs out at sea. The land ends at the Dursey Sound – where strong tides make travelling by boat hazardous. Yet out to sea is Dursey Island, one of over 100 islands off West Cork – seven of which, including this one, are inhabited. Three families live and farm on this tiny island, and you can take a 10-minute ride – above the waves, on Ireland’s only cable car – to explore it on foot. There’s a lighthouse, castle ruins, a signal tower, standing stones, and stunning sunsets – known locally as “Europe’s last”. But do take note of the cable-car etiquette in this corner of the world: the residents – with or without their sheep – take priority over visitors in the queue for a crossing.

And ...

LET NATURE SET THE PACE IN TIMELESS WEST CORK

There’s a timeless air to the area around Bantry and Glengarriff, at the base of the Beara Peninsula. Nature sets the pace in this beautiful south west corner of Ireland. And the Atlantic coastline here is blessed by the warmth of the Gulf Stream. The area’s got something of a microclimate, with lush vegetation and sub-tropical shrubs. And the almost-Mediterranean feel is underlined by the Italianate gardens on Garinish Island, in the sheltered harbour of Bantry Bay. These gardens were created by Harold Peto in the 1920s, and visited by celebrities throughout the 20th century, including George Bernard Shaw while writing St Joan. The gentle, relaxing climate here seems to have rubbed off on the wildlife too. The three Harbour Queens, waterbuses taking visitors from Glengarriff Pier to Garinish, detour around Seal Island, whose inhabitants – up to 250 seals, well used to the ferries – laze on the rocks as if posing for photographs. It’s a singular sight.

Signature Discovery Point 14 – Mizen Head

LOOK OUT TO SEA FOR IRELAND’S LAST TEARDROP

When you can go no further to the south and west in the whole of Ireland, you’re at the dramatic Mizen Head. Out here, early 20th-century engineering provides a thrilling experience: climb down the steps at the very end of the peninsula and onto a high arched suspension bridge connecting the mainland to a rocky crag that points its long finger out into the roaring seas. Far below you the surf foams and crashes, and you may find you have your heart in your mouth. But don’t worry, this bridge is built to withstand the full force of nature. On the far side is the exposed Fog Signal Station, with its exhibition about the keepers’ lives in the early 20th century. And out on the horizon the imposing Fastnet Lighthouse stands on a rock known as Ireland’s tear drop: for millions of emigrants to the new world, this was their last sight of their native land.

And while there...

SEE STARS SPARKLE ABOVE AND BELOW YOU

Tidal currents rush in from the Atlantic to feed Lough Hyne, a marine lake whose warm salt waters support a rich habitat of plants and creatures. On summer nights, Jim Kennedy, Atlantic Sea Kayaking takes small groups on a special journey, kayaking across the sea lake. As dusk falls, Jim tells stories about this magical place, the birds settling for the night on the shoreline, the seals surfacing alongside, and the nocturnal creatures stirring in the surrounding waters and along the banks of the Lough. With darkness, the magic begins. First, flickers of light on the front of the kayaks, and shining ripples spread out from the paddle blades. A hand dipped into the warm water sparkles. Microscopic marine life erupts into ghostly phosphorescence. And the surface of the water seems to mirror the starry skies.

Signature Discovery Point 15 – Old Head

FEEL THE SPIRIT OF KINSALE

They say the best way to see Kinsale is from the sea. And perhaps the best way to understand Kinsale is with a former fisherman at the helm. One who's studied Archaeology & Celtic Civilisations at UCC, and got a Masters in Local History, that is. Jerome was born and grew up on the Old Head of Kinsale, and worked as a fisherman in these waters for 28 years. He'll share his local knowledge with you on a tour in his boat The Spirit of Kinsale – taking you out across the Harbour, past the Charles Fort and right to the Atlantic's edge. It'll only take an hour, but there's freshly brewed coffee (after all, Kinsale is the gourmet capital of Ireland), blankets to keep you warm, and – best of all – stories that will stay with you. Stories about this Viking trading post that played a key role in Irish history. About the network of fortified towers, signal stations built to ward off invasion. About the Siege of Kinsale in 1601. And about the night in 1915 when a trans-Atlantic liner – the Lusitania – was sunk by a German U-Boat right off the Old Head: 1200 passengers and crew lost their lives, drawing the US into World War I.

And ...

SEA-KAYAK THROUGH CAVES BENEATH KINSALE'S OLD HEAD

You don't have to have kayaked before to explore the coves and caves of Cork's crenellated Atlantic coastline under your own paddle-power. H2O Sea Kayaking in Kinsale runs beginners' expeditions out to the Old Head – where you can paddle under the headland itself through sunlit sea arches. Shoals of small fish swim below you in the clear shallow water, and a seal pops its head up to take a look. Out in the open again, cormorants line the cliffs and you may spot a basking shark. Lunch is a picnic on a tiny beach you can only reach from the sea. That's when you realise it: you're as hooked as that fish you'll eat for tonight's supper in smart, foodie Kinsale.

Silver Strand Malinbeg Silver Strand Malin Beg Co. Donegal	Silver Strand beach is a spectacular hidden gem of a beach at Malin Beg and 7km south of Glencolmcille. The beach is accessible only from the sea or on foot via a series of steps. Your challenge here is to count the steps down to the beach – 155 going down and 154 going up!! The bay is called "The Doon" and both the bay and beach are surrounded by high cliffs which act as giant wind breakers making the beach a natural sun trap. Trabane Strand is popular with hikers as a starting / finishing point for a walk that crosses the notorious "One Man's Pass," a narrow ridge with steep drops on both sides, people who suffer vertigo beware.

Gleniff Horseshoe Valley Cliffoney, Sligo	Those with an interest in industrial archaeology and local heritage will be fascinated by this site, which also has a lovely woodland walk to take you through native Irish trees and along-side rushing mountain streams and waterfalls. Further on you will pass a road leading up to T.V. antenna at the top of Truskmore. From here there is a stunning view of five counties. As you turn to go back down the valley you come to the spectacular cliffs of Annacoona. The cliff face contains small mine entrances, testament to a bygone age when the mineral Barytes was extracted from here. The corner of this valley forms a natural amphitheatre, the result of the last ice age when glacial action plucked the limestone from the back wall of the cliffs which are rich in arctic alpine plants clinging to the north facing walls. More than ten species of rare Irish plants grow here including mountain avens, green spleenwort, mossy saxifrage and holly fern. Watch for the raven as well as the chough, kestrel or peregrine falcon. The cave in which Diarmuid and Grainne, Irish legendary figures, slept their last night is clearly visible, high on the mountain, behind the old school building.

Clare Island Lighthouse Clare Island, Co. Mayo Web: www.clareislandlighthouse.com	Clare Island stands guard at the entrance to Clew Bay, off the coast of Mayo. For almost two centuries, the island's Lighthouse has been a nautical landmark perched high on the craggy cliffs, watching over Achill, Westport and beyond. Once a safe haven for sailors, this heritage property now offers sanctuary of a different kind. This architecturally majestic, listed building has been lovingly transformed into fully catered, luxury accommodation, complemented by magnificent sea views and an inspiring, natural environment. Newly refurbished and reopened accommodation. Small visitor attraction opening in 2014.
Clapper Bridge, Louisburgh West of Louisburgh at Burlehinch near Killeen, Co. Mayo	Thought to date from medieval times and one of last remaining clapper bridges in the world. Known locally as the Colony Bridge, after the Church of Ireland settlement in that area. Of similar construction to bridges found in Devon and Cornwall, this clapper bridge, built for pedestrians, was made at a place on the river where the water depth was generally low. It is the largest complete clapper bridge in Ireland, stretching 50 m (164 ft) across the river. Its 37 arches are superbly constructed in the primitive clapper style, each made of a clapper or flat limestone slab resting on a pier of about 0.6 m (2 ft) above the river bed.
Clew Bay Cruises Westport, Co Mayo Web: www.clewbaycruises.com	Cruise on Clew Bay and see the thriving seal colony, beautiful secluded beaches, and breath-taking views of Croagh Patrick, Murrisk Abbey and Bertraw Beach. You'll enjoy sailing past the many sheltered islands, Inishgort lighthouse and the shore of Dorinish Island, formerly owned by John Lennon, who spent some time there. The remains of the huts and dwellings used by the 'hippies' that called the island home can be clearly seen. The onboard commentary will guide you through the history of Clew Bay, from battles to tragedies, from the Ice Age to modern day.
Rolling Sun Spectacle Bohea, Westport, Co. Mayo	Every year, on April 18 and August 24, the sun appears to roll down north face of Croagh Patrick at dusk – a phenomenon that is best viewed from the Neolithic Rock of Boheh (or Bohea). The rock bears one of the finest examples of Neolithic rock art in Ireland and Britain, and its carved 'cup and ring' motifs are the only known such examples west of the Shannon. It is almost entirely covered in carvings, which also include several unusual patterns known as keyhole motifs. The stone is the only fixed place in the landscape from which the Rolling Sun spectacle can be seen, and this appears to be the reason that it was chosen by the Neolithic artists.

Coasteering involves climbing, jumping, scrambling and swimming around the rock pools, cliffs and caves of the intertidal zone. The Loop Head coastline might have been made for this sport, with its rocky cliffs and imposing marine geology. Wearing a full-body wetsuit, buoyancy aid, helmet and appropriate footwear, and under the supervision of an experienced guide, you'll explore caverns, gullies, coves and rock formations, moving both on foot and on the water.

Birdwatching at the Bridges of Ross

Birdwatching at the Bridges of Ross

Web: www.clarebirdwatching.com

Co. Clare

The Bridges of Ross were formerly a trio of sea-arches but they have been worn away over the years by the fierce Atlantic, leaving one remarkable 'bridge' still to be seen. This low-lying area has the ideal orientation that marks it out as an internationally renowned seabird-watching site. In the late summer and early autumn sea birds such as shearwaters, skuas and petrels pass by close to shore, sometimes overhead, as they follow Ireland's western shore on their southern migration.

Available from Tarbert or Foynes, take a RIB Tour to explore Ireland's largest estuary. The Foynes Island Tour (30 min) takes in Foynes Island and then into parts of the Fergus Estuary, which offers almost totally unspoiled coastline and ever-changing scenery, along with some birdlife which is almost impossible to observe from the shore. The Estuary Historical and Wildlife Tour (60 min) explores the outer Estuary, its wildlife and brings visitors out to historic Scattery Island, which contains the ruins of a 6th Century Monastery, several medieval churches and a unique 10th Century Round Tower.

Fancy beating the rat race for a little while? Dursey Island is the place to do it. Lying across a narrow sound off the tip of the Beara Peninsula, this is the dictionary definition of escape – no business, no traffic, no hassle. Just rugged nature and the awe-inspiring Atlantic Ocean. There is one sign of civilisation, of course – Dursey’s unique and charismatic cable car. Hitched to the mainland above dolphin-strewn Dursey sound, this is Ireland’s only cable car, running 250m (820ft) above the sea. With a capacity of carrying just six people at a time, the cable car is a lifeline for the few inhabitants, living in three small villages on the island. Stepping onto the island, visitors can continue on foot along a stretch of the Beara Way. Highlights on Dursey include the ruins of O’Sullivan Beara’s castle, a 200-year-old signal tower with views stretching to the Skelligs and Mizen Head, and several standing stones. The indented coastline, open bog and wild winds leave you in no doubt – you’re far from the madding crowd.

The Seven Heads Walk extends from Timoleague Village through Courtmacsherry, around the rugged cliffs and shore line to Dunworley and on through Barryscope and Ardgehane to Aghafore and Barry’s Hall and then back to Timoleague. The walk embraces a very interesting and varied territory in the course of its entire distance of approx. 42.5km (26.5 miles) around the peninsula. As there are several routes and circular walks, one can choose a route to suit the time and energy available. As well as the breathtaking and rugged scenery which the route embraces, there are also historical sites and a wide variety of interesting flora and fauna which varies with the time of year. The walkway leads through a variety of different types of scenery, rocky coastlines with magnificent marine life, sandy beaches, extensive rich farm land, picturesque villages and farm yards. The route also is home to some prolific bird life with rare birds such as the Choughs and the Little Egret, as well as having old woodland and hedge rows with fuchsia in abundance. Or why not try rock climbing? You won’t find a better coastal adventure!
